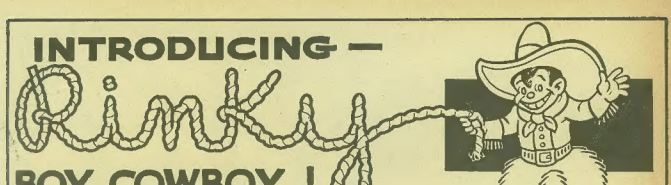
CARL ANDERSON'S

HENRY



Like most youngsters, RINKY has a very lively imagination. In fact, there have been those on the ranch, like Rinky's mother and father, who said that Rinky did not quite manage to tell the EXACT truth, all the time.

Well, on this particular day, right before round-up time, Rinky happened to be playing near the corral where Dynamite, a wild horse, was being kept.

As Rinky practiced with his lariat, he heard a sad voice from the corral say, "Oh, if I could only get out of here for ten minutes!"

When Rinky looked into the corral he saw there was nobody there . . . except Dynamite!

Rinky scratched his head and grinned. As he turned away from the corral he said aloud, "For a minute I thought I heard a voice! Ha, ha, but only Dynamite's in the corral . . . and HE can't talk!"

"OH, NO! YOU'RE JUST LIKE ALL THE OTHER FOLKS AROUND THIS RANCH, RINKY! YOU THINK HORSES CAN'T TALK!" A VOICE SAID.

When Rinky got over his shock he pointed a chubby finger at Dynamite and said, "GEE, A TALKING HORSE!"

Dynamite just sort of bowed his handsome head kind of bashful like. Then he murmured very politely, "AW, gee, Rinky! It's not so hard to do!"

But Rinky thought it was WONDERFUL! He ran over to the corral railing, patted Dynamite on the head and said, "Gosh, Dynamite, can ALL horses talk?"

Dynamite turned his head modestly. "Well, Rinky, I don't like to brag, but only SMART horses like me!"

At that moment Rinky's father called to him from the ranch house. "Rinky," his father said, with a stern look, "I told you not to play near Dynamite! He's a very dangerous horse!"

"But, gosh, Daddy, Dynamite's really not a BAD horse! HE'S VERY NICE TO TALK TO!"

"Rinky! HORSES CAN'T TALK! It's just your imagination. You stay away from Dynamite!"

Rinky said, "Yes, Daddy." He walked away and played a good distance from Dynamite. But then Dynamite called urgently, "Oh, Rinky! Please help me. A colt, who is my first cousin, is lost deep in the hills! Open the corral gate so I can go rescue him. I promise to come back!"

RINKY WAS IN A PICKLE NOW! If he let Dynamite out his Daddy would be very angry with him! BUT IF HE DIDN'T, THEN DYNAMITE'S FIRST COUSIN MIGHT STAY LOST . . . FOREVER!

Quickly he opened the corral gates. Dynamite galloped out like the wind. Almost as quickly, Rinky's Daddy ran over to the corral and said, "I saw you Rinky! Why did you let Dynamite escape?" He was very angry, indeed!

Just then Rinky's mother, who had been watching all the time, hurried over and whispered something to Rinky's
